

I think the case is closed as soon as I am saying that I am "paying" for it. One of the most important reasons why America is as strong as it is today is because of capitalism. XM offers this as a perk to its "paying" subscribers, so they can get instant traffic and weather, when they need it. While the members of the NAB are not charging for services, that are in no comparison even close to being an instant information exchange, the listener still "pays" for this information by ways of listening to commercials, which in turn keeps the traditional AM/FM stations afloat. I don't see anyone attacking the fact that Pay TV services, such as cable and satellite, offer streaming "instant" weather, in addition to other instant services such as news feeds.
